

Dear to whom it may concern,

My name is William Bishop Gluckman, an eighteen year old student. I am heading to the University Of Colorado next year, as an incoming freshman. I am writing this note today concerning Net Neutrality, and explaining my stand on it. While you may not wind up reading this note, due to the vast amount of new filings. All directed to you by Twitch.com. I feel it is important to voice my opinion, or else I cannot complain about the negative results, that may occur.

As the world becomes more of a vast advertising campaign, through the corruption of once innocent things like Facebook videos, or the vastly popular product placement, a popular form of advertisement in today's films. The internet was a unbiased platform to have a conversation, about our modern realities. The modern realities that are more abstract than the physical products, pushed on us through advertisement. The internet was a place that we could have open chat forums. But if Net Neutrality is stripped from the internet, we will no longer have a platform to have such conversations. But rather have another source of culture in our life, tainted by advertisement and mainstream media corporations. Pushing products onto us, rather than homesome family values, or an ethical code.

Another disturbing point about removing Net Neutrality would be the provider would be the supplier of information. The providers would have a direct hand of control over the population. With corporations like Google selectively favoring certain companies over others, and certain presidential websites over others. Guiding everyday "Joe's" decisions in a certain direction. The mainstream of society would be directly coursed into where they spent their money. Removing general autonomy on our day to day decisions. Making corporations like Amazon more of a overlord, and less of the friendly book provider, it once was.

We sacrifice our daily autonomy from 8am to 5pm Monday through Friday, so that we can make money. Money is our autonomy to show our individuality in what we buy. But, with an influenced internet, we no longer can freely decide where to shop, if the small unique boutiques are only located on the 51st page on a Google Search. The consumer may never find it, but rather get stuck shopping at Amazon, or Google type corporations. Fueling a new age of Modern Monopolists. Thus, changing the entire world around us. Net Neutrality is an issue that measures who's more important, the individual or the corporation. To side with the corporation is a blind decision, that lines modern billionaires pockets with gold.

And that is my opinion on the issue.
